If he were among us now he would see reason to enforce it with more emphasis than ever. Whoever invented the proverb "Spare the rod and spoil the child," it is mere trifling to assign any other than the obvious meaning—that is, tind if you spare the rod you ing-that is, that if you spare the rod you will spoil the child.

The raging intidelity of Mr. G. W. Smalley exhibits itself in a very ridiculous manner in his account of the disaster at the Tay bridge, near Dungee, copied by the Dispatch from the New York Tribune. The letter which Mr. Smalley condemns, for no reason that one can see, except that the resiter can be Bible that night contains a writer read his Bible that night, contains a graphic description of the terrible affor. I have seen nothing or the subject more in-teresting. Incidentally the author men-tioned that at his residence, overlooking the bridge, he was reading, it being Sunday night, stories from the Bible to his children, and had selected, as appropriate in such a storm, the account of Paul's shipwreck. For this he is abused by Mr. Smalley in a most remarkable style, and the newspapers of London for spreading such stuff before their readers. Mr. Smalley finds fault with this writer for sanctimoniousness, &c., and for the deliberate arrangement of his expletives under such circumstances I failed to be struck with the former, and as to the latter the style is not so studied as Mr. Smalley's. If it is to be condemned for being more religious, this is a matter about which readers may differ. Yours truly, OLD DOMINION.

Editors Richmond Dispatch : In this morning's paper (4th) "Susini" inquires who was the author of some familiar lines containing something about "You may bresk the vase, but the scent of the roses will linger round it still," &c.

Now, the facts are these: In a ballad of Tom Moore's beginning, "Farewell, but whenever you welcome the hour," will be "You may break, you may ruin The vase if you will, But the scent of the roses will Hang 'round it still,"

Strange to say, Tom Moore plagiarized it om Horace, as will be seen from the following:

Swiss Lakes Frozen Over. LONDON, January 29.—A dispatch from Geneva to the Times says: "For the fourth time during the present century the Lake of Zurich is frozen over. The lakes of Morat, Neufchatel, and Bienne, and the river Arve are also frozen over."

Recent advices by mail state that no cold as severe as that which was then prevailing in Switzerland had been experienced in that country for many years. In the early part of December the whole Alpine region was visited by a terrific snow-storm, which continued without intermission for twenty hours, and caused many disasters in the mountains. The storm was accompanied by a very high wind, which attained the velocity of a burricane on the 5th of the month. In the forests of Zofin-gen, Lenzburg, and Lausanne thousands of trees were taid low and many buildings seriously injured. In one hamlet of the Bernese Jura all the cottages were unroofed and the unfortunate inmates on that bitter night-exposed to all the fury of the storm. But the saddest misfortune of all was one which befell near Tavannes, in the same locality. Three children on their way home from school, blinded by the thick-falling snow, wandered from the road, and after many hours' search their parents found them, their little arms twined round each other's neeks, frozen to death. A singular effect of the terrible cold was to drive thousands of mouettes, or lake-gulls, from their homes among the rocks of Savoy to Geneva. They hew and footed all day long, when the sun shone, about the Pont du Mont Blane, disputing with the swans and ducks the food thrown to them by the spectators, who watched from the bridge their graceful mevements. These birds are such general favorites that no one is suffered to harm them, and they are fed and protected by the municipality. There was a great snow-storm in Switzerland and over a large part of the continent about Christmas-time of the year 1825. In Lausanne no such storm had been known since 1829. In the Rhone Valley all the trains were stopped. In Geneva no fewer than 670 laborers were employed in cleaning the streets and public places. The saloon steamer Heiselfa, on the Lake of Zug, which carries so many fourists from all nations to the Rigi-Arth Mountain railall nations to the Eigi-Arth Mountain rail-way in summer, was sunk by the mere weight of the enormous mass of snow which fell upon it. The blinding storm on the Lake of Geneva stopped the steam-boat traffic after the Cygne had been driven upon a sand-bank near Villeneuve. One year ago there was some severely cold weather in Switzerland. In January of last year the forests of the Bernage Jura with Supply Ex. Early Pex Bounding some on the Lake of General supple the steam of the page of General supple the steam of the steam of the supple the on the Lake of Geneva stopped the steam boat traffic after the Cygne had been driven upon a sand-bank near Villeneuwe. One year ago there was some sevenely cold weather in Switzerland. In January of last year the forests of the Bernese Jura were, as the result of the intense cold, infested with droves of wild boars, which were smetimes so numerous as to defy attack. The farms were frequently attacked by wolves, and hundreds of chamois descended into the valley in search of food.—
